CHAPTER I

Preliminary

1. Short title and commencement .-(1) This Act may be called The National Environment Tribunal Act, 1995.

(2) It shall come into force on such date or dates as the Central Government may, by notification, appoint, and different dates may be appointed for different States and any reference in any provision of this Act to the commencement of this Act shall be construed in relation to any State or part thereof as reference to the coming into force of that provision in that State or part thereof.

Object & Reasons ▼

Statement of Objects and Reasons.-The principle of strict civil liability in accident cases arising from the activities involving hazardous substances has been highlighted in a case by the Supreme Court of India. An enterprise engaged in activities with potential threat to the health and safety of the persons residing in the surrounding areas of the factory owes an absolute duty to the community to ensure that no harm is caused to any one on account of hazardous and inherently dangerous nature of such activities. Cases seeking compensation for damages to human health, property and the environment, particularly contamination of sub-surface water, are increasing. There is also an increasing trend in the number of industrial disasters.

The United Nations Conference on Environment and Development held at Rio de Janeiro in June, 1992, in which India participated, has also called upon the States to develop National laws regarding liability and compensation for the victims of pollution and other environmental damage.

3. It is deemed expedient to develop and codify the principle of strict civil liability in respect of all such cases where damage is caused while handling hazardous substances. It is proposed to establish a National Environment Tribunal for effective and expeditious disposal of cases arising from certain industrial accidents and disasters with a view to providing effective and expeditious relief and compensation for damages to human health, property and the environment.
